National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal zone will affect Wales at times through Wednesday and Thursday. With strong winds and moist air this is likely to generate heavy rain across upland areas in particular, with some large accumulations expected. 40 to 60 mm is likely quite widely over high ground with over 80 mm across prone areas such as Snowdonia.

There is some uncertainty over the behaviour of the front on Thursday as a number of waves develop, and it is likely that there will be some dry periods across some areas at times, interspersed with spells of heavy rain - the focus now more on north Wales for Thursday. This warning will be kept under review and updated as and when necessary.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 11:30 on Wed, 02nd Dec 2015 until 21:00 on Thu, 03rd Dec 2015

Rain will be heavy at times during Wednesday and Thursday. Given saturated ground and high river levels, be aware of the potential for flooding, leading to disruption to travel, localised property flooding and danger from fast-flowing deep water.

This is an update to extend the yellow area to more of south Wales.
